Long-term outcome in patients with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy treated with beta-adrenergic blockade. The objective of the study was to investigate the effect of propranolol on the prognosis of patients with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy (HCM). Clinical assessment was performed in 272 patients with HCM after they were treated with propranolol for at least 4 years. A total of 96 patients showed no or little hypertrophy (group A), whereas 176 patients presented with marked hypertrophy (group B). After a follow-up period of 5.4 years (range 4.0-7.8), there were no significant differences between group A and B with respect to the event-free survival (log-rank test:  $P = 0.929$ ). In conclusion, the outcome of HCM in propranolol-treated patients is not affected by the degree of hypertrophy at baseline.

Reduced IL-12 bioactivity in human plasma of severe malaria. Plasma from children with severe Plasmodium falciparum malaria was examined for its ability to promote development of IL-12-dependent alloreactive T cells. Human PBMC or CD4 T cells were co-cultured with autologous CD14 monocytes in the presence of IL-4 and various concentrations of plasma from malaria patients with cerebral malaria. At high plasma concentrations of malarial plasma the proliferation of T cells was severely inhibited. Neutralization of IL-12 but not IL-4 abrogated the inhibition and restored T cell proliferation. The inhibitory effect on T cell proliferation was not caused by complement or human immunoglobulins, was not associated with detectable levels of IL-1 or TNF, and was restricted to plasma from patients with cerebral malaria. T cell proliferation was also inhibited in the presence of plasma from healthy controls and patients with non-malarial fever, suggesting that the effect is unrelated to malaria. The lack of IL-12 activity may help to explain the severe thrombocytopenia.

[Primary rhabdomyosarcoma of the appendix. Report of a case]. Appendicular tumours are a rare entity and represent 1-2% of all tumours of the appendix. Rhabdomyosarcoma is the most common appendicular tumour. The most common symptoms are abdominal pain, diarrhea and palpable mass. We report the case of a 17-year-old female who presented a painless, palpable mass in the left iliac fossa. She had a history of appendectomy in the past and she underwent an appendectomy and partial hysterectomy for pain and tamponade symptoms. On histopathological examination, we found a huge tumour with extensive necrosis. Immunohistochemical tests revealed positive reaction for muscle markers. For these reasons, the diagnosis of rhabdomyosarcoma was reached.
