Cross-talk between monocyte and epithelial cells enhances functional responses to cytokines and bacterial invasion. We recently reported that monocytes can be activated in the epithelium by infection with the bacterial pathogen Salmonella enterica serovar Typhimurium. Monocytes were activated in the presence of cytokines and phagocytosed cells expressing epithelial cell adhesion molecules. Current studies demonstrated that monocytes can be activated by cytokines and epithelial cell adhesion molecules in the absence of pathogens and phagocytosed cells. Although primary human cells were used for these studies, activation of monocytes required exogenous activation. In addition, primary epithelial cells alone were sufficient for activation of monocytes. The current studies demonstrated that activation of monocytes by primary human epithelial cells could be enhanced by other cytokines or bacteria that are produced by the epithelial cells. We demonstrated this cross-talk between monocytes and epithelial cells in the context of IL-1beta, tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha), and S. enterica serovar Typhimurium infection. These findings indicate that monocytes are activated in the epithelium by bacterial infection and modulate the epithelial immune response in the vicinity of bacterial invasion. 12 of the 200+ cases identified with CARs syndrome (). According to the National Center for Educational Statistics (NCES), in 2004, it was estimated that there were more than 15 million homeschooled children in the United States alone (OECD's Education at a Glance 2014). Often their parents have been convinced by 'experts' that the 'unschooled', unschooling, homeschooling, or other alternative methods of education are inferior, that they deprive their children of the educational advantages of the traditional, socially sanctioned school experience, or that they are somehow antisocial or against individual rights and freedoms. But are they? When I was a young boy I was one of about a dozen children taking art lessons at the local art center during the summer and a couple years of one-room school during the school year. I remember admiring the professional work of teachers, but despite my close contact with those instructors, I was only able to learn about the history of art and very little about how to actually make art.
