War of the Pacific is a tactical, tactical-combat naval simulation game designed specifically for the Commodore 64 computer. You have been sent to liberate Chile and Peru, who has been invaded by a 3rd power. To keep the peace after the war, you are supposed to collaborate with both countries as a means of rebuilding both countries. The game starts in Chile, through a historical transition from victory to revolution against the North American occupation. After the revolution, the country becomes one of chaos, but a chance arrives for a new government to rise. Your mission is to guide a small formation of vessels to destroy the enemy fleet and prevent a naval blockade. Avoid getting captured and suffer ship losses. A 3rd country invades the neighbouring country and the war begins. You will have to keep a balance between countries, strategic ports and battleships, and on the field. This week, we are pleased to announce that Steam is going to be hosting a sale on Tides of War! We don't have a definitive release date just yet but we're hoping it will be sometime within the next week. If you haven't tried Tides of War

The sale on Tides of War is one of many supporting activities organised by Frozen Codebase to celebrate the launch of the new DLC. Following the announcement of the Tides of War DLC last week, an update was made to the Steam page for the game, which informed visitors that there would be additional sales of the game until the end of the year. To celebrate the launch of the game and its updates, the developers have announced that there would be an additional donation to the SEMA Foundation in order to support the ongoing efforts of the organisation for the homeless youth of metropolitan Melbourne. The SEMA Foundation is made up of over 5,000 youth and their families, and aims to improve and build self-esteem, self-reliance and lives for homeless young people in Melbourne. ### What's new in Memory Lost-Pairs - Christmas:

(2006) 2006 Christmas was just around the corner, and with both the New Year, and my birthday in this week, I should have been writing lots more stories. But, there just weren't any ideas for Christmas tales, and I found myself distracted by the other big holiday of the year, Thanksgiving. The second week was filled with newspaper, and last-minute shopping....and a business trip to the west. But I didn't find time to write any stories, even on the computer. I was exhausted and really didn't have any strength to write anything. On Friday night, I finally had a time to start a feature length story. It was two weeks from the day it should have come out, so there was about a week to decide what to write about. It ended up being a story about an aged blind man who is sent out into the freezing blizzards of a mountain to search for children...in hopes of finding a small group, with whose children he may rekindle the fires of holiday spirit in the world. It was a sad, and somewhat disturbing story, but I had fun writing it. I come full circle again here. Once upon a time, in Canada, I wrote a ten minute fiction story, about a state that takes care of the least capable people in society. That was then, and this is now. With the stories written by others, as inspiration, it is always important to find something that you can stand on your own, and express. The manner in which I wrote the story, was totally different from the way I normally write. It was not the normal happy, campfire tale type of story I normally write, as a go-getter...motivational...and I was really happy with the result. But, everyone here has told me to stick to my normal and not to stray too far. Normally, I never liked forcing an event, or character into a story...I was having fun with it. I had to force something, and let the story unfold around the issue, and around the character. I found myself curious about his character, and took a walk all around the town with my head turned towards the sea and snow, and wondered who he was and what he was doing out on the road, in blizzard conditions, in the middle of night.
